businesscompanion

trading standards law explained

Egg producers selling directly to consumers

In the guide

Registration
Labelling requirements
'Best before' dates
Method of farming
Free range
Barn
Storage
Disposal of eggs
Egg inspections
Trading Standards
In this update
Key legislation

Although the United Kingdom left the European Union (EU) in 2021, certain pieces of legislation (known as 'assimilated law') continue to apply until such time as they are replaced by new UK legislation, revoked or permitted to expire. This means that our guidance still contains references to legislation that originated from the EU.

This guidance is for Scotland

Eggs sold directly to the consumer from a farm, by door-to-door delivery, or from a market or boot sale do not need to be weight graded or stamped, but must be labelled with a best-before date, a statement that eggs should be kept refrigerated after purchase, and in certain circumstances the production site's name and address or individual code. These requirements do not apply to graded or cracked eggs. There are specific provisions for the labelling of free-range eggs and barn eggs.

If you sell your own eggs at a farmers' market or car boot sale, you must be registered on the Scottish Kept Bird Register and the eggs must be marked with the method of production, as below, together with your producer identity number and the country of origin. You will also be inspected.

This guidance relates to eggs from hens. Eggs from other species of birds are not subject to marketing standards, but still have to follow general labelling requirements such as the best-before date and naming the species that produced the eggs.

Registration

Since 1 October 2024, all keepers of poultry and most other captive birds have been required to register their flocks on the new Scottish Kept Bird Register. Previously, only flocks with 50 or more birds were required to be registered. See 'Registration and records of poultry and other captive birds' for more information.

When you register, APHA will issue you with a production site code; this needs to be marked on the eggs you sell.

If you are selling eggs for human consumption, you will also need to be registered as a food business; please contact your local council for further information.

Labelling requirements

A best-before date must be given ('best before' followed by a date) and this must be a maximum of 28 days after the date of lay. When applying the best-before date, consideration should be given to any thin-shelled eggs and the storage of eggs in high ambient temperatures. The best-before date does not have to be stamped on to the egg, but it must be at least supplied with it.

Appropriate storage information (such as 'keep chilled after purchase') should be provided.

For local public markets or car boot sales, eggs must be individually stamped with a code that states the production site and farming method. A notice must be displayed explaining the meaning of the letters and numbers that form the code stamped on the egg.

The farming method codes are as follows:

- 0: organic
- 1: free range
- 2: barn
- 3: caged hens

A typical egg may be stamped, for example, 3UK12345, which means:

- 3: caged hens
- UK: country of origin
- 12345: production site code

An exemption to the requirement to stamp applies for producers with a flock of fewer than 50 birds, but in these circumstances the producer's name and address must be provided on a notice.

Eggs sold in one of the three ways described above cannot be marked or advertised with a weight grade or class. For more information on this and other labelling requirements, please see 'Retail sale and labelling of eggs'.

The only exception to the above labelling requirements is where the eggs on sale are produced on the premises from which they are being sold. In this case the eggs need not be weight graded or marked with any information; however, a best-before date must be given.

'Best before' dates

Eggs, whether loose or packed, must be marked with a best-before date of no later than 28 days after the day of laying. Retailers must sell eggs within 21 days of laying.

There is no legal requirement to have a sell-by or display-until date on eggs, but it may help you to ensure eggs are sold within the 21 days. Where no sell-by / display-until date is shown, it is best practice to remove eggs from sale seven days before their best-before date.

Method of farming

The method of farming, relating to the stamped code, can be indicated using the wording below, where applicable:

- free-range eggs
- barn eggs
- eggs from caged birds

These descriptions also apply if you wish to voluntarily describe your eggs when selling from your premises or door-to-door.

If the eggs have not been produced in accordance with the methods set out for free-range eggs or barn eggs, they are automatically classed as eggs from caged hens.

Laying hens cannot be kept in cages that only meet the requirements of the 'conventional cage' system. More information about this is available in the Scottish Government's Guidance for the Welfare of Laying Hens and Pullets (please refer to the section headed 'Enriched cage systems: additional housing requirements').

Free range

Eggs described as 'free range' must be produced in poultry establishments in which the hens have:

- continuous daytime access to open-air runs
- access to ground mainly covered with vegetation
- at least 4 m² of ground available per bird

In addition, there are requirements in relation to the hens' housing and fittings.

Barn

Barn eggs must be produced in a poultry establishment where the hens:

- are provided with at least 15 cm perch space per hen
- have floor space providing at least 1 m² for every nine chickens
- comply with requirements relating to the hens' housing and fittings

If you need further advice about the other descriptions of methods of farming, or the hens' housing requirements, please contact your local APHA office.

Storage

In order to keep the eggs you sell in good condition, when storing them they must be kept:

- chilled and protected from changes to, and extremes of, temperature; between 5 °C and 17 °C is suitable
- dry, out of direct sunlight and away from other goods that might flavour them, such as onions or washing powder

You should also consider:

- handling them as little as possible, as small cracks will cause the eggs to deteriorate and lose weight
- taking care when storing trays on top of each other, as this may cause the eggs to crack

Disposal of eggs

For information on disposal of eggs not for human consumption, please see 'Poultry inspections' on the Scottish Government website.

Egg inspections

This is carried out by APHA. Further information relating to the above legislation, including advice on registering as a packer, can be found in the 'Poultry inspections' section of the Scottish Government website.

Trading Standards

For more information on the work of Trading Standards services - and the possible consequences of not abiding by the law - please see 'Trading Standards: powers, enforcement and penalties'.

In Scotland, food labelling laws are not generally enforced by Trading Standards services, but rather by Environmental Health. However, we have included In-depth Guides on food for Scotland in order to provide more comprehensive guidance.

In this update

All keepers of poultry and most other captive birds are now required to register their flocks, no matter how many birds they keep.

Last reviewed / updated: January 2025

Key legislation

- assimilated Regulation (EC) No 853/2004 laying down specific hygiene rules for food of animal origin (Annex III, section X)
- Animal Health and Welfare (Scotland) Act 2006
- Eggs and Chicks (Scotland) (No. 2) Regulations 2008
- assimilated Regulation (EC) No 589/2008 laying down detailed rules for implementing Regulation (EC) No 1234/2007 as regards marketing standards for eggs
- Welfare of Farmed Animals (Scotland) Regulations 2010
- assimilated Regulation (EU) No 1169/2011 on the provision of food information to consumers
- Food Information (Scotland) Regulations 2014

Please note

This information is intended for guidance; only the courts can give an authoritative interpretation of the law.

The guide's 'Key legislation' links may only show the original version of the legislation, although some amending legislation is linked to separately where it is directly related to the content of a guide. Information on changes to legislation can be found by following the above links and clicking on the 'More Resources' tab.

© 2025 Chartered Trading Standards Institute

Source URL:

https://www.businesscompanion.info/en/quick-guides/food-and-drink/egg-producers-selling-directly-to-consumers-s