

Checklist for businesses to understand how to recognise and support consumer vulnerability

This checklist should be used once the accompanying guidance on identifying consumer vulnerability has been read. A Vulnerable Consumer Policy should also be considered to support this checklist and the guidance.

THE CHECKLIST WILL HELP TO

- Document a vulnerability assessment process
- Help staff assess consumer vulnerability in a consistent way
- Record the information

Checklist	Y/N/Notes
Use BE REAL to identify consumers who may show signs they could be vulnerable. Once a consumer has shown signs of vulnerability, then steps can be taken to support them. If signs are there, use the checklist to document what you discussed. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Retain Is the consumer able to retain and repeat the information you give them? Do you have to repeat what you have discussed over and over again? • Explain Is the consumer able to properly explain or communicate the decision they have made? Are they joining in the discussion or just agreeing with what you are saying? Are they asking questions that aren't related to what you are saying? • Able Is the consumer able to understand what they are being told? • Listen Is the consumer able to listen, follow and understand the discussion taking place? Or are they just repeating what you say?
I have read and considered how the consumer is assessed against the businesses vulnerability guidance/policy.
I have actively encouraged the consumer to share any potential vulnerability, considering all circumstances – situational, marketplace, health, life events, relevant abilities and barriers.
I have recorded anything the consumer has said on the relevant system.
I have discussed my approach with my line manager or other members of staff.
I am considering whether I need any further information from the consumer to support them in their experience and to ensure they get what they need from the business.

ALWAYS REMEMBER

Try to understand the impact of vulnerability and how this might affect the consumer experience and outcomes.

Consumer vulnerability is fluid and dynamic; consumers can move in and out of periods of situational vulnerability.

Do not directly call consumers 'vulnerable' as it is disempowering; it's their situations that make them vulnerable.

Are there any other relationships with this consumer I need to be aware of, for example, Power of Attorney?
I have considered how I need to deliver any relevant information to this consumer – for example, braille, large written format.
I have considered the language I am using and taken a plain English approach when explaining a product or service. I don't use complicated industry-specific language if it can be avoided.
I have taken the time to listen, to identify vulnerabilities and, if appropriate, will suggest that someone else (a family member or trusted friend) forms part of the advice process and/or refer to a suitable specialist if appropriate.
I have taken account of the complexity of the service/goods being delivered and made reasonable adjustments – for example, staggering the advice over several meetings and/or allowing more time to think before making a decision.
I haven't made assumptions about the consumer.
I have asked the consumer what they need and how I can help them better.
I have summarised what has been decided or agreed in plain English.
Do I need any additional support, training, supervision, support from my line manager?
