GUIDANCE £ FOR TRADERS ON PRICING PRACTICES
1 Introduction
2 Relevant legislation
3 Glossary
4 The regulatory framework
5 Professional diligence
   Vulnerable consumers
6 General requirements
8 Banned practices
9 Price promotions
   Is your pricing practice unfair?
10 Getting it wrong
   Does your promotion contain false information?
11 Is your pricing practice deceptive even if it is factually accurate?
   Have you told consumers what they need to know?
12 Use of additional text
14 Using reference prices
   • After-promotion price
   • Introductory price
   • Recommended retail price (RRP)
   • Comparison to a competitor’s price
   • Comparison with prices in different circumstances
20 Time limited offers
21 Volume offers
22 Use of ‘free’
24 Additional charges
   • Compulsory charges that are fixed
   • Compulsory charges that may vary
   • Optional charges
25 ‘Up to’ and ‘from’ claims
26 Subscriptions
INTRODUCTION

This guidance has been produced by the Chartered Trading Standards Institute at the request of the Department of Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy (BEIS) and the Consumer Protection Partnership. It replaces the 2010 Pricing Practices Guide, produced by the then Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS), which is now withdrawn.

This guidance is designed to provide helpful common sense advice to traders about pricing practices. It provides an overview of consumer protection laws that relate to pricing and associated practices for traders. Anyone who regularly sells or engages in the process of selling products or services is likely to be regarded as a trader. All traders must comply with these laws when they sell any goods or provide commercial services to consumers within the United Kingdom. UK law applies to websites located outside the UK if they are offering products or services for sale to UK consumers.

The guidance covers all consumer goods and services, from restaurants to hairdressers, including estate agents, banking, airlines, car retailers, supermarkets, furniture retailers, etc. It applies to all platforms used for business-to-consumer commercial practices, including all distance contracts (online, by telephone, etc) and any other medium used to sell to consumers. This guidance focuses on the obligations required by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (the Regulations). It does not cover all legislation that applies to traders, nor does it cover business-to-business transactions. It is not possible to identify every fair or unfair pricing practice and consequently the guidance focuses on the main areas of concern highlighted during the consultation process. The legislation in this area avoids prescriptive rules and focuses on general principles of fair dealing. The guiding principle is that traders have the responsibility for ensuring that their pricing practices do not mislead consumers.

Regulators may refer to the guidance when making enforcement decisions about a trader’s pricing practices. This guidance is not statutory guidance and a court is not bound to accept it. The decision whether any particular pricing practice is unlawful remains to be judged by all of the relevant circumstances. Only a court can determine whether a trader has breached the law in a specific case.

The guidance provides examples of good practice to assist fair-dealing traders in assessing their pricing practices. It indicates, with examples, behaviour which is generally likely to comply with the law, as well as providing examples of behaviour which may not. Adherence to these recommendations will not, of itself, ensure that an act or omission complies with the Regulations; the circumstances of each particular case will always need to be considered. Equally, a departure from these recommendations will not necessarily mean that the pricing practice is unfair. Each trader is responsible for ensuring compliance with the Regulations and will need to consider how it ensures it has the right level of resource and expertise available to achieve this. You may wish to seek legal advice or contact your local trading standards service.

If you have any comments or observations about any aspect of the guidance please contact CTSI at institute@tsi.org.uk. Feedback will be taken into consideration in future reviews of the guidance.

1 The CPP was formed in April 2012. More information at https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/consumer-protection-partnership-update-report-2016-to-2018
2 www.tradingstandards.uk/tssearch
The most important legislation in this area is the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (referred to in this guidance as ‘the Regulations’), which prohibit traders from engaging in unfair commercial practices with consumers. The Regulations implement the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive in the United Kingdom.3

The Regulations prohibit pricing practices that are false or misleading, such that the average consumer might take a different transactional decision (for definitions see the glossary). A pricing practice may be unfair if it, or its overall presentation, is likely to deceive consumers, even if the information contained is factually correct.

The Regulations are broad and likely to cover all forms of representation made about the price, or price promotion, of a product (goods and services) sold by traders to consumers. In particular, there is specific reference in the Regulations to:

- the price of a product
- the manner in which the price is calculated
- the existence of a specific price advantage4

The Regulations also prohibit misleading omissions. Information that is material to a consumer must not be omitted, hidden or presented in a manner which is unclear, unintelligible, ambiguous or untimely.

The Regulations impose a general obligation on traders not to contravene the requirements of professional diligence, which are defined by reference to the standard of skill and care that is commensurate with honest market practice or the general principle of good faith (see page 5 for more details).

Other legislation

The Price Marking Order 2004 requires traders to indicate the price, quantity and unit price of specified products, primarily foodstuffs.

There are additionally specific information requirements for traders in relation to on-premises, off-premises and distance contracts.5

There are also sector specific rules on price indications in relation to, for example, consumer credit6 and package travel.7

Visit www.businesscompanion.info for advice and guidance on these requirements.

---

4 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 5(4)
5 Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013
6 Consumer Credit Act 1974
7 Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992
This glossary contains explanations or words and expressions as they are used in this guidance.

| Average consumer | Defined in regulation 2 (2)-(6) of the Regulations.
The material characteristics of an average consumer should be considered ‘including his being reasonably well informed, reasonably observant and circumspect.’ European case law suggests that social, cultural and linguistic factors should also be taken into account.
Where the commercial practice is directed to a particular group of consumers, or a particular group that is vulnerable to the practice, ‘average consumer’ refers to the average member of that group.
See page 5 for further explanation. |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Commercial practice</td>
<td>Any act, omission, course of conduct, representation or commercial communication (including advertising and marketing) by a trader, which is directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product to or from consumers, whether occurring before, during or after a commercial transaction (if any) in relation to a product.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Consumer</td>
<td>An individual acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside that individual’s business.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Material information</td>
<td>The information that the average consumer needs, according to the context, to take an informed transactional decision. It also includes certain information required to be given to consumers as a consequence of European consumer legislation.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Product</td>
<td>Defined widely to include goods, services, digital content, immovable property, rights and obligations or the demand of payment from a consumer in settlement of a liability.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professional diligence</td>
<td>The standard of special skill and care which a trader may reasonably be expected to exercise towards consumers which is commensurate with either (a) honest market practice in the trader’s field of activity or (b) the general principle of good faith in the trader’s field of activity.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reference price</td>
<td>Price promotions that aim to demonstrate good value by referring to another price that is typically higher.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trader</td>
<td>A person acting for purposes relating to that person’s business, whether acting personally or through another person acting in the trader’s name or on the trader’s behalf.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Transactional decision

Any decision taken by a consumer, whether it is to act or refrain from acting, concerning:

(a) whether, how and on what terms to purchase, make payment in whole or part for, retain or dispose of a product; or

(b) whether, how and on what terms to exercise a contractual right in relation to a product.

‘Transactional decision’ covers a wide range of decisions that have been or may be taken by consumers before, during or after a contract is formed.

This guidance uses ‘take a different decision’ as short-hand for a transactional decision that an average consumer would not have taken otherwise.

See page 9 for further explanation.

---

THE REGULATORY FRAMEWORK

Trading standards services in England, Wales and Scotland and the Northern Ireland trading standards service enforce the Regulations.

The Competition and Markets Authority also enforces the Regulations.

The Advertising Standards Authority - UK Code of Non-broadcast Advertising and Direct & Promotional Marketing (CAP Code) and the UK Code of Broadcast Advertising (BCAP Code) are advertising codes for advertisers, agencies and media which are designed to address misleading, harmful or offensive advertising. The Codes must be followed by all advertisers, agencies and media. The Codes are enforced by the Advertising Standards Authority, considered an established means\(^8\) for gaining compliance with the Regulations, who can take steps to remove or have amended any ads that breach these rules.

---

\(^8\) Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 19(4)
The Regulations require that traders behave professionally and responsibly in the pricing of their products. You are expected to formulate pricing practices in accordance with honest market practice and the general principles of good faith in your field of activity. This obligation is derived both from the prohibition against contravening professional diligence9 and also the due diligence10 defence that applies to the criminal offences of engaging in misleading acts or omissions.

What amounts to the exercise of due diligence in relation to a pricing practice will depend on all of the relevant circumstances. No prescriptive rule can be stated about what is sufficient in every case.

However, if your pricing practice is challenged, the following may be important to regulators:

- evidence of how your price promotions are communicated to consumers: on price labels, signs and notices; oral representations; in publications such as newspapers, magazines, flyers, etc; radio and television advertisements; social media and electronic media, such as websites, SMS text messaging, emails and apps; and in any other documentary or electronic advertisements
- any terms and conditions of the pricing practice and how these were communicated to consumers
- evidence of the stock and availability of a product during a price promotion. Retain records of your prices, stock and sales histories whilst the promotional and non-promotional prices were charged, with relevant dates, locations, websites, etc and sales volumes at the promotional and non-promotional prices
- where a comparison has been made against a competitor, record the competitor’s pricing fairly, including evidence (if appropriate) that you have compared like with like - for example, website screenshots to demonstrate the product, price and period over which a competitor has offered a product. See pages 18-19 for more guidance

The Regulations require traders to ensure that consumers are not treated unfairly, by reference to the standard of an average consumer. However, it is important to understand that the characteristics of the average consumer may include vulnerability.

You need to take special care if you are targeting a price promotion at particular groups of consumers who may be vulnerable - for example, on the grounds of age, credulity or mental or physical infirmity. Vulnerability is also situational; consumers may be vulnerable for a short period because of a personal situation, such as bereavement or debt. You have a legal obligation to ensure that all such vulnerable groups are fairly treated.11

Examples:

- wheelchair users may be vulnerable to pricing practices in relation to holiday destinations that claim ease of access
- the elderly may be more vulnerable to pricing practices in relation to security systems
- children may be vulnerable to advertisements in relation to toys

9 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 3(3)
10 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 17: The trader took ‘all reasonable precautions and exercised all due diligence to avoid the commission of such an offence’
There are certain general requirements that a trader should consider when pricing products for sale. In addition to the Regulations, overlapping obligations can be found in the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 and the Price Marking Order 2004. Visit www.businesscompanion.info for advice and guidance on these requirements.

These general requirements apply to all of your pricing practices and should be read in conjunction with the rest of this guidance.

DO indicate the total price of the product inclusive of taxes when you invite consumers to purchase it. If the nature of the product means that the price cannot reasonably be calculated in advance, indicate how the price will be calculated - for example, fabric on a roll is priced by the metre.

DO provide all additional freight, delivery and postal charges in or with the price. If those charges cannot reasonably be calculated in advance, tell consumers that they may be payable - for example, ‘Delivery charges apply and vary according to destination’.

DO include all compulsory fees and charges in the price.

DO show unit prices where required by the Price Marking Order 2004.

DON’T charge consumers a fee for using a credit card or debit card.

DON’T use a default option (such as a pre-ticked box on a website) in order to obtain a consumer’s consent to an additional fee or charge.

Delivery Charges

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Delivery Charges</th>
<th>Price</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Up to £7.99</td>
<td>£0.95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£8.00 to £24.99</td>
<td>£2.95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£25.00 to £39.99</td>
<td>£4.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£40.00 to £54.99</td>
<td>£6.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£55.00 to £64.99</td>
<td>£7.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£65.00 to £89.99</td>
<td>£9.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£90.00 to £149.99</td>
<td>£12.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£150.00 to £199.99</td>
<td>£17.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£200 and over</td>
<td>£25.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

12 Implementing in part the Consumer Rights Directive 2011/83/EC
13 Implementing the Price Indications Directive 98/6/EC
14 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 6(4)(d); Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, Schedule 1(c) & Schedule 2(f); Price Marking Order 2004, article 4(1) and (2)
15 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 6(4)(e); Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 Schedule 1(d) & Schedule 2(g); Price Marking Order 2004, article 7(3)
16 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulations 5 and 6
17 Price Marking Order 2004
18 Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012, as amended by the Payment Services Regulations 2017
19 Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, regulation 40
DON’T use statements such as ‘all’ or ‘everything’ unless the statement applies to all of the products described, to everything in the store or in that category.\(^{20}\)

DO remember that perishable products - for example, food near to its ‘best before’ or ‘use by’ date or other products that are deteriorating, such as plants - can be reduced in price without referring to the guidance in relation to reference prices on page 14.

---

\(^{20}\) Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 5(2)(a)
Certain practices are banned and are considered to be unfair and unlawful in all circumstances.\textsuperscript{21}

\textbf{DON’T} advertise products or services at a specific price if you have reason to believe that they will not be available in reasonable quantities at that price for a reasonable period without making this clear in the promotion.\textsuperscript{22}

\textbf{DON’T} advertise a product at an attractive price to encourage interest and then discourage its purchase in order to persuade the consumer to switch to something different - for example, by demonstrating a defective sample or by refusing to show the product, take an order or deliver the product within a reasonable time.\textsuperscript{23}

\textbf{DON’T} falsely state that a product will only be available at a particular price or available on particular terms for a very limited amount of time in order to persuade the consumer to make an immediate decision and deny them the time or opportunity to make an informed choice.\textsuperscript{24}

\textbf{DON’T} claim that you are about to cease trading or move premises when you are not.\textsuperscript{25}

\textbf{DON’T} describe a product as ‘free’ or similar if the consumer has to pay any more than the unavoidable cost of responding to your offer, collecting the product or paying for delivery.\textsuperscript{26}

See page 22 for more guidance on the use of ‘free’.

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{21} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1
  \item \textsuperscript{22} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 5 (bait advertising)
  \item \textsuperscript{23} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 6 (bait and switch)
  \item \textsuperscript{24} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 7
  \item \textsuperscript{25} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 15
  \item \textsuperscript{26} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 20
\end{itemize}
This guidance is designed to provide helpful common sense advice to traders about pricing practices that regulators are likely to consider fair or unfair.

If you wish to promote your products by making claims in relation to price you should spend time and effort ensuring that the claim is transparent and not unfair. The guiding principle is that the promotion should not, in any way, mislead, deceive or take advantage of consumers. Consumers should be able to have confidence that they can rely on the information that you provide when making their decision to purchase.

The average consumer is described in the Regulations as having the characteristics of being ‘reasonably well informed, reasonably observant and circumspect’. However, even well-informed, observant and circumspect consumers can be deceived by unfair and misleading practices.

The Regulations do not just apply to the decision to purchase a product. They extend to other transactional decisions, such as the decisions a consumer makes about payment terms or the exercise of other contractual rights. This may also include decisions that do not have a direct financial consequence, such as entering a shop. You should consider the impact that any pricing promotion might have on all of the decisions that consumers may take.

Consider:
- who is the promotion aimed at?
- what will that person understand it to mean?
- is that different to the actual position?

For each pricing promotion, you should ask yourself:
- is any information (however it is given) false?
- even if the information is factually correct, will it, or the way in which it is presented, deceive or be likely to deceive?
- is information that a consumer needs to know omitted, hidden, or given in a manner that is unclear, unintelligible, ambiguous or untimely?

If any of your answers are ‘Yes’, or if you have any doubts, you should change your pricing promotion.

---

27 Trento Sviluppo srl and Centrale Adriatica Soc. Coop arl C-281/12, [2014] CTLC 326
It is important for traders to get pricing right. Getting it wrong could:

- create the illusion of savings that do not exist or have been exaggerated
- generate confusion amongst consumers
- generate legal claims for compensation
- cause civil enforcement action to be taken by regulators
- result in a complaint to the Advertising Standards Authority
- cause criminal enforcement action, fines and negative media exposure
- generate adverse publicity by consumers sharing negative stories about price promotions in the press or social media

Your price promotion should not contain false information about the price, ‘the manner in which price is calculated’ or the ‘existence of a specific price advantage’. The following are examples of practices that may breach this requirement:

- advertising a price promotion for a product that is not in fact available at the advertised price
- comparing your current price to a reference price that is not genuine. (See page 14 for further guidance on reference pricing)
- comparing your own price to the higher price of a competitor or to a recommended retail price (RRP) but presenting the higher price as your own previous price
- excluding a compulsory charge from your headline price. (See page 24 for further guidance on additional charges)
- claiming a discount that is not in fact given to the consumer - for example, ‘10% off all main courses’ where the price is not adjusted accordingly at the till
- claiming a discount for all of your products when all products are not in fact included in the offer - for example, ‘10% off all package holidays booked before end of September’ when holidays to Spain are excluded

28 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 5 (4)(g) & (h)
IS YOUR PRICING PRACTICE DECEPTIVE EVEN IF IT IS FACTUALLY ACCURATE?

Consumers must be able to trust the information you have provided them with. Your pricing practice must not contain information that might deceive consumers or that is presented in such a way that might deceive consumers, even if the information is factually accurate.

Care should be taken to ensure that better-value offers based on size are not unfair because smaller packs offering the same or better value can also be purchased from you. 29

If you become aware that your competitor has lowered their selling price but you take no steps to withdraw or amend the pricing practice you may allow the promotion to become unfair. 30

HAVE YOU TOLD CONSUMERS WHAT THEY NEED TO KNOW?

The Regulations prohibit misleading omissions. Therefore it is important that you do not mislead consumers by leaving out important information or presenting it in a way that hides or disguises it.

Your pricing practice can therefore be considered unfair if:

• it omits material information
• it hides material information
• it provides material information in a manner which is unclear, unintelligible, ambiguous or untimely and it causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a different decision

The Regulations define material information as ‘The information which the average consumer needs, according to the context, to take an informed transactional decision’.

29 For more advice on volume offers, see page 21
30 For more advice on comparing your prices to other trader’s prices, see pages 18 & 19
You must ensure that the presentation of your offer is transparent and clear. You should consider how consumers are likely to understand it, having regard to its overall presentation.

In particular, you should consider the prominence and clarity of any additional text in comparison to the headline text or main message.

You should ensure that the headline or prominent message is truthful, clear and consistent with other information you provide. It should not need explanatory text to make it comply, particularly if that text is not prominent.

Consider how the offer is expressed - a simple offer can be communicated in straightforward terms using direct language. If your offer is more complex you should take care to ensure that it is presented in a way that consumers will fully understand.

Additional information should not contradict the headline claim. It must be given in a clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely manner. Including material information in the small print in a manner that is not clear and prominent may mean that you do not meet that requirement.

Material information might be:

- qualifying statements - for example, ‘Wednesdays from 6pm’
- important conditions of the offer - for example, ‘minimum two dinners’
- relevant exclusions - for example, ‘set menu only’
If you operate a website or use other digital communication, you should use technology so that information is communicated to consumers in a way that is transparent and timely. Additional text that is likely to make a difference to the consumer’s decision should be prominent and close to the price, headline or main message. You should not delay telling consumers about additional charges or other material information when it is possible to do so from the outset.

It may amount to an unfair practice if your technology requires that consumers take extra steps, such as clicking on a link or scrolling down a page, to obtain material information, such as additional costs. You should consider carefully whether it is possible to provide consumers with material information about the price and additional costs without the need to visit other webpages or to follow links.

For more information on the use of additional text see the Committee of Advertising Practice guidance Qualification claims
Reference pricing refers to price promotions which aim to demonstrate good value by referring to another, typically higher, price.

Four examples of reference pricing are:

- ‘was/now’ prices, which compare an advertised price to a price the trader has previously charged for the product
- after-promotion prices or introductory prices, which compare the current advertised price to a price the trader intends to charge in the future
- recommended retail prices (RRPs), which compare an advertised price to a price recommended by the manufacturer or supplier
- external reference prices, which compare an advertised price to a price charged by another trader for the same product

Including a reference price in an offer can create a point which consumers use as a base for estimating the value of the product and might reduce the effort consumers put into shopping around and comparing prices. It follows that reference pricing calls for a high level of trust and integrity. It is unlikely that consumers will have made a record of the reference prices in order to determine for themselves whether the claimed price reduction is genuine.
Any specific price advantage claimed must not be misleading or unfair.\textsuperscript{31} It is important to be clear and not to make unfair price comparisons. If your proposed pricing practice explicitly or by implication indicates a saving against another price you must be able to satisfy yourself that the quoted saving is genuine and is therefore not unfair. Ask yourself whether the average consumer would think that it is a fair comparison.

Below is a non-exhaustive list of issues that should be considered when determining whether a price reduction is genuine.

1. How long was the product on sale at the higher price compared to the period for which the price comparison is made?

2. How many, where and what type of outlets will the price comparison be used in compared to those at which the product was on sale at the higher price?

3. How recently was the higher price offered compared to when the price comparison is being made?

4. Where products are only in demand for short periods each year, are you making price comparisons with out-of-season reference prices?

5. Were significant sales made at the higher price prior to the price comparison being made or was there any reasonable expectation that consumers would purchase the product at the higher price?

\textsuperscript{31} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, regulation 5(4)(h)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Issues to be considered</th>
<th>More likely to comply</th>
<th>Less likely to comply</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. How long was the product on sale at the higher price compared to the period for which the price comparison is made?</td>
<td>The price comparison is made for a period that is the same or shorter than the period during which the higher price was offered.</td>
<td>The price comparison is made for a materially longer period than the higher price was offered.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. How many, where and what type of outlets will the price comparison be used in compared to those at which the product was on sale at the higher price?</td>
<td>The retailer makes a price comparison against a reference price that has been offered in the same store as the price comparison is made.</td>
<td>A retailer charges £3 in store A and £2 in store B and then claims ‘Was £3 now £1.50’ in store B, referring to a reference price in a store where that price was never charged.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. How recently was the higher price offered compared to when the price comparison is being made?</td>
<td>A travel agent refers to a selling price that was charged less than two months ago with no intervening prices and therefore gives a genuine indication of the current value of the holiday.</td>
<td>A website refers to previous selling prices that were charged many months ago and therefore no longer represent a genuine indication of the current value of the item.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Where products are only in demand for short periods each year, are you making price comparisons with out-of-season reference prices?</td>
<td>An online trader reduces its prices in order to generate sales where demand has fallen away when the sales season for a product has passed.</td>
<td>A trader offers the product at a higher price when the product is out-of-season and then lowers the price in time for the expected product demand.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Were significant sales made at the higher price prior to the price comparison being made or was there any reasonable expectation that consumers would purchase the product at the higher price?</td>
<td>The retailer can provide evidence to show significant sales at the higher price or that this was a realistic selling price for the product.</td>
<td>A retailer repeatedly uses a reference price knowing that it had not previously sold a significant number of units at that price.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
It is important that price comparisons are genuine. Examples of price comparisons that may not be genuine include:

1. During the period that the product was sold at the higher price, different types of discount were offered - for example, multi-buy.

2. The higher price is not the last price that the product was sold at - for example, there have been intervening prices.

3. A series of price claims made against a reference price, where each subsequent claim does not offer a greater discount.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examples of price comparisons that may not be genuine</th>
<th>More likely to comply</th>
<th>Less likely to comply</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. During the period that the product was sold at the higher price, different types of discount were offered - for example, multibuy.</td>
<td>An online retailer offers a product for sale with the price claim of ‘Was £500 now £350’ for a month. For the preceding month the product was priced at £500 with no price promotions or other price reductions.</td>
<td>An online retailer offers a product for sale with the price claim of ‘Was £500 now £350’ for a month. For the preceding month the product was priced at £500 with a volume promotion operating at the same time - ‘Buy 2 get 10% off’.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. The higher price is not the last price that the product was sold at - for example, there have been intervening prices.</td>
<td>A sofa is offered for sale at £500 immediately before the price promotion ‘Was £500 now £350’ is advertised.</td>
<td>A sofa is offered at £500 then reduced to £350 with no claim of saving. A number of weeks later the product is labelled as ‘Was £500 now £350’.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. A series of price claims are made against a reference price, where each subsequent claim does not offer a greater discount.</td>
<td>A coat is offered at ‘Was £150 now £99’, then a further reduction is made and the item is advertised as ‘Was £150 now half price £75’.</td>
<td>A coat is offered at ‘Was £150 now half price £75’; subsequently the same item is advertised as ‘Was £150 now £99’.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
After-promotion price

You can make a comparison against a price that you will subsequently charge for a product. However, this type of pricing practice is likely to be considered unfair if the price is not subsequently increased to the advertised after-promotion price at the end of the promotional period or the reference price did not meet the guidance starting on page 14.

Introductory price

Traders must consider carefully the use of ‘new’ or ‘introductory price’ in price promotions. You should assess what consumers in your particular sector would consider as new and therefore how long the claim can be made before the new or introductory price becomes the normal selling price. The claim ‘new’ could be used for a longer period where the product is rarely purchased, compared to a regularly purchased product.

This type of pricing practice is likely to be considered unfair if the price of the product is not in fact increased at the end of the promotional period.

Recommended retail price (RRP)

A recommended retail price (RRP) is a price that a manufacturer or supplier has independently recommended. The use of RRPs is contentious and there have been calls to prohibit the practice completely. Traders must take extra care when using RRPs to ensure that they do not mislead consumers.

When making comparisons to an RRP, you should clearly and prominently tell consumers that the higher price is an RRP, rather than a price that you have charged. The initials RRP have historically been used in the UK and their meaning is likely to be understood by most consumers. You should avoid using other abbreviations unless you can be sure that consumers will have a clear understanding of their meaning in the context of the sale.

An RRP must not be false; it must not be created purely in order to present the appearance of a discount. An RRP must represent a genuine selling price. You should not recommend your own RRP or influence the price at which your third party supplier or manufacturer sets the RRP.

Traders using RRPs should consider obtaining substantiation from their suppliers or manufacturers that the RRP represents a genuine selling price. The use of RRPs as a reference price without such substantiation leaves the business open to the risk that the RRP is not genuine and may be considered misleading.

Further guidance on the use of RRPs is available from the Committee of Advertising Practice: ‘marketers should be aware that while it is acceptable for them to quote RRPs if they are genuine, such price comparisons are likely to mislead if the RRP differs significantly from the price at which the product or service is generally sold.’

Comparison to a competitor’s price

Comparisons that you make to a competitor’s price must comply with both the requirements of the Regulations and the Business Protection from Misleading Marketing Regulations 2008. The price comparison must not be false or mislead consumers and they must be told any material information in a way that is clear, transparent and timely.

A fair comparison may be made between the price of a product you sell against the same product being sold by a competitor. Such comparisons can be helpful to consumers who are looking for the best price for that item or service.
You can also make comparisons with products which, whilst not identical, meet the same needs or are intended for the same purpose. You should set out any material differences between your product and the competitor’s product clearly and transparently. This is unlikely to be achieved if material differences are not a prominent part of the presentation of the price comparison to consumers. You should not selectively focus on element(s) of a competitor’s price that are unrepresentative and give an overall impression that is misleading.

The basis of any comparison you make against your competitor should be objective rather than subjective. The comparison must objectively compare one or more material, relevant, verifiable and representative features of the product. You should consider providing simple mechanisms through which a consumer can verify the comparison, such as online, by email, telephone or in writing.

If you operate in a particularly price-sensitive sector, where prices frequently change, you should take care to ensure that your price comparison does not become misleading because your competitor’s price has changed. You should monitor the position and take prompt action to withdraw claims if necessary.

You must not compare the price of your product against the price of a product with a designation of origin - for example a Cornish pasty32 - unless your product has the same designation of origin.33

If you wish to make a comparison based on prices in specific locations, care needs to be taken to establish whether there are local price variations. If the prices you wish to use are based on information made available centrally by your competitor - for example, online - you should check for local variations.

You should not make general claims that give the overall impression that all of your products are cheaper, if that is only true for selected items. If you make a claim that your prices are generally lower, you should explain why it is a fair and suitable comparison - for example, by telling consumers the basket of products chosen is based on a typical weekly shop.

It is important that you keep clear documentary records of any price comparisons that you have made against a competitor’s price. You should identify your competitor, their product and the circumstances in which they offered the product at the price you are comparing against. In some instances, it may also be important to provide technical evidence to demonstrate that your product is not materially different.

In making a price comparison to the price of a competitor you must observe the following rules:

- you must not deliberately mislead consumers into believing that your product is made by a particular manufacturer, when it is not 34
- you must not create confusion between you and your competitor
- you must not create confusion between your products' trademarks, trade names, other distinguishing marks and those of your competitor
- you must not discredit or denigrate the trademark, trade name or other distinguishing mark, goods, services, activities or circumstances of a competitor
- you must not take unfair advantage of the reputation of a trade mark, trade name or distinguishing mark of a competitor or of the designation of origin of competing products
- you must not present products as imitations or replicas of products bearing a protected mark or trade name

For more information about comparing to a competitor’s price see the Committee of Advertising Practice guidance Retailers’ price comparisons

---

33 Business Protection from Misleading Marketing Regulations 2008, regulation 4(g)
34 Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 13
Comparison with prices in different circumstances

It may be possible to make a fair price comparison against the price of a product that has been sold in different circumstances. However, it is very important that any material differences in the circumstances are communicated to consumers in a way that is transparent, fair and prominent. Features that differentiate the circumstances must be clear and not hidden in the small print. Any material information must be provided in a clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely manner.

The comparison must be readily understandable and relevant to the consumer it is directed towards. The differences between the circumstances must still allow for a fair comparison to be made. The overall impression given to consumers must not be misleading even if the information provided is correct.

Additional text (refer to guidance starting on page 12) may be useful to ensure that the pricing practice can be clearly understood by the average consumer, as long as it is provided in a clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely manner.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examples of pricing practices</th>
<th>More likely to comply</th>
<th>Less likely to comply</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Comparing pricing models that are not like-for-like</td>
<td>The website claims ‘Save 50% on airport parking’ and also states ‘when you book in advance, compared to the turn up and pay price in a clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely manner.</td>
<td>The website claims ‘Save 50% on airport parking’ with no further details of the basis of the claim of 50% savings.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Comparing products in different conditions</td>
<td>A car retailer advertises the price of a second-hand car and claims a saving against a higher price that was the price of the car when new. The origin of the higher price is clearly stated alongside the savings claim.</td>
<td>A car retailer advertises the price of a second-hand car and claims a saving against a higher price that was the price of the car when new. This information is not provided.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

TIME LIMITED OFFERS

It is a breach of the Regulations to deprive consumers of sufficient opportunity or time to make an informed choice by falsely stating that a product is only available on those terms for a very limited time.\(^{35}\) It is particularly important that traders do not contravene this provision where a consumer is likely to feel under pressure because of the circumstances of a sale, such as a sale made in a consumer’s home.

Where a product will genuinely only be available on particular terms for a limited time, and consumers need to act quickly to take advantage of the offer, the date the offer ends is very likely to be material information. Therefore it should be provided in a manner that is clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely.

Once the end date for any pricing promotion has been published (for example, in store, in press, TV advertising or online), any change to the end date is likely to be scrutinised carefully by regulators to assess whether the originally publicised time limit was genuine. You should avoid changing the end date unless circumstances arise that could not be reasonably foreseen at the time that the price promotion commenced.

If there is any delay between a consumer ordering a product and receiving it, you should make clear whether the price promotion applies if the time limit expires after a consumer has ordered the product, but before the delivery of goods or commencement of a service.

\(^{35}\) Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1 paragraph 7
Volume offers are price promotions that aim to demonstrate good value by reference to the volume, weight or amount of the product purchased, or the purchase of a combination of different products.

Examples of volume offers include:

Multi-buys - where the consumer gets a discount by purchasing more than one unit of a product, such as:
- buy one get one free
- three for the price of two
- two for £3

Combination offers - where a discount is given when the consumer purchases a specified combination or basket of products, such as:
- meal deal: sandwich, drink and crisps for £5

Linked offers - where the consumer is offered a free or discounted product for purchasing another product, such as:
- half price MOT with your car service

Extra for the same price - where the consumer is given more for the same price, such as:
- 50% extra free
- bigger pack - better value

You should not use this type of price promotion unless the consumer is genuinely getting better value because of the offer. Care must be taken to ensure that any volume offer is not made to be unfair because better value was being offered before the volume promotion or for the same product elsewhere in your business.

The risk of these price promotions being unfair is increased if they are not easy to understand. You must ensure that the price promotion provides all of the material information that the consumer needs to understand it and that this information is provided in a clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely manner. You should not take advantage of the fact that many consumers will not calculate for themselves whether your price promotion actually offers better value - for example, the price of a combination offer should be cheaper than the total cost of buying the same items separately.

Pre-printed value claims on pack such as ‘Bigger pack - better value’ should be objectively accurate and justifiable.
You must not use the term ‘free’, or similar phrases, unless the consumer pays nothing other than the unavoidable cost of responding to the commercial practice and collecting or paying for delivery of the item.\textsuperscript{36}

In promotions where an item is described as ‘free’ traders should be able to show:

- that the free item is genuinely additional to or separable from what is being sold
- if the consumer complies with the terms of the promotion, the free item will be supplied alongside what the consumer is paying for
- the stand-alone price of what is being sold is clear and is the same with or without the free item

Receiving the free product can be conditional on the purchase of a product provided this is made clear - for example:

- the claim ‘Free wallchart when you buy Thursday’s paper’ is legitimate if the paper is sold without a wallchart on other days for the same price
- a claim of ‘Free travel insurance for customers who book their holiday online’ is legitimate if customers who book the same journey by telephone are offered the same price but not offered free insurance

The item must, however, be truly free. The cost of the free item should not be recovered by reducing quality or composition or inflating the price of the product that is to be paid for. You should not describe a part of any package as ‘free’ if it is already included in the package price.

You should not exaggerate the value of any free product or service to persuade consumers to make qualifying purchases.

\textsuperscript{36} Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, Schedule 1, paragraph 20
You should not describe a service as free if it is not free for consumers that choose not to enter into an agreement with you after receiving the service - for example, you should not use the terms ‘free valuation’ or ‘free call-out’ if there is a one-off charge for a consumer who decides not to proceed with a subsequent purchase or agreement.

For more information on the use of ‘free’ see the Committee of Advertising Practice guidance Free claims
This section contains further detailed guidance on additional charges and should be read in conjunction with the general requirements.

Examples of additional charges are:

- fixed compulsory charges, which all consumers have to pay
- charges for a component of the product or service that is compulsory but where there is a range of possible charges for that compulsory component
- additional charges for an optional product or service

Compulsory charges that are fixed

Additional charges should be included in the up-front price if they are compulsory. A failure to include compulsory charges in the up-front price may breach the Regulations.

Examples of compulsory charges are:

- a non-optional administration fee that must be paid for a service
- a set cover charge at a restaurant
- mandatory insurance cover required for hiring a car

Compulsory charges that may vary

Compulsory charges may vary in accordance with the consumer’s choices or circumstances. Even if the charge may vary, it is still compulsory if the consumer must always pay something extra for it - for example, a delivery charge might depend on the consumer’s location or the size/weight of the product.

Where a compulsory charge may vary, you should alert consumers to the charge at the outset. You should give information about how it will be calculated in a clear, intelligible, unambiguous and timely manner while still allowing the total cost to be easily and readily calculated by the average consumer as soon as possible.

Delivery Charges

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Charge</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Up to £7.99</td>
<td>£0.95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£8.00 to £24.99</td>
<td>£2.95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£25.00 to £39.99</td>
<td>£4.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£40.00 to £54.99</td>
<td>£6.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£55.00 to £64.99</td>
<td>£7.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£65.00 to £89.99</td>
<td>£9.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£90.00 to £149.99</td>
<td>£12.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£150.00 to £199.99</td>
<td>£17.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>£200 and over</td>
<td>£25.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Care should be taken that general notices such as ‘Up to half price sale’ or ‘From 50% off’ are not misleading; they must reflect the reality of the offer. You should only make such a claim if the maximum reduction quoted applies to a significant proportion of the range of products that are included in the promotion. A prominent general claim of a maximum discount such as this should represent the true overall picture of the price promotion. The ‘up to’ and ‘from’ claims are essential to the understanding of the pricing practice so should be shown clearly and prominently.
If your agreement with a consumer requires that repeat payments are made, such as a monthly subscription, the extent of the consumer’s financial commitment should be set out clearly and prominently from the outset, and the consumer’s express consent to these additional payments secured before they are charged. You should not mislead consumers about the extent of their future commitment in order to secure an agreement. If you initially offer a product that is free or heavily discounted, you must inform consumers clearly and prominently of any additional payment obligations that will be incurred, including the duration of any contract.